Washington Adventist Hospital and Mary's Center to Open Clinic on Takoma Park Campus

Washington Adventist Hospital is again partnering with Mary's Center, a federally qualified, comprehensive health center, to expand health-care access to the underserved by opening a second clinic in the hospital's service area. The new primary care clinic is scheduled to open on the hospital's Takoma Park campus in late 2011, and is projected to nearly double the number of community members Mary's Center serves, regardless of their ability to pay.

In addition, the two organizations will work together to develop a comprehensive plan which will allow Mary's Center to operate a primary and urgent care center on the Takoma Park campus as part of the Village of Education, Health and Wellbeing once the hospital relocates to White Oak.

The Village's health-care offerings will include primary care services in collaboration with Mary's Center, inpatient and outpatient rehabilitation services, and a behavioral health clinic. Washington Adventist Hospital also continues to work with its neighbor and partner, Washington Adventist University, to plan for the utilization of hospital space for classrooms and other University functions. The 100-year relationship with the University will expand to include creating clinical simulation learning environments, allow for University nursing faculty and students to work in the primary and urgent care center, and enhance collaboration to expand the University's School of Health Professions, Science and Wellness.

"We are committed to ensuring that there is appropriate access to needed primary health-care services in Takoma Park now, and in the future," said William G. "Bill" Robertson, President and CEO of Adventist HealthCare. "Through our important partnerships with Mary's Center, Washington Adventist University and others, the Village will not only provide health-care and wellness services, but education and research opportunities for the community as well."
